Keymacro allows the creation of macros which execute automatically when a key is pressed in the keyboard. It can be useful for the following applications: - Trackballs - Joysticks - Mouse Features: - Macro files are saved into a special directory - Configuration files that describe the preferences - Macros can be configured (see the sample.txt for more details) - Context menu to manage a macro - Keylogger: Password saved in the Keymacro database are saved on your computer. It can be disabled in Keymacro properties. - Application hotkeys: Can be used to launch an application or send it a key combination. - Key macros in default applications: In the Default Applications list, you can define hotkeys, from the application menu, in the following way: Keymacro KeyName So, for example: Keymacro Internet Explorer keyWinFocus Keymacro And you also need to save the key WinFocus with the following key: Keysave HKLM\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Explorer\Advanced\Extensions\Pin to taskbar Now you have a shortcut that will open the Internet Explorer window in fullscreen mode with the focus on the tab that contains the address bar. Important: Keymacro is currently working only with the Windows versions XP and newer. - Adding user-defined commands to the context menu - Support for custom icons and various other UI improvements - A great new user interface - Works with ALL WINDOWS including server versions What it does: Menu Command Maker is a powerful tool that allows to add an unlimited number of custom commands to your Windows 7 or Windows 2008 R2 menu. Why is it powerful? Because you can create dynamic menu commands without having to manually edit the registry. You can also set commands to run on the click of a button, or when a file or folder is opened. In addition to creating custom menu commands, the program also allows you to edit and save your menu commands. You can also create submenu commands and command buttons in the menu. Using the built-in feature, the program can be configured to work with any menu that you create. This means that if you create a context menu for a given folder, any menu command you create in this folder will be displayed in that same menu. The commands you create are available in the command menu (for example, "Open in browser 1d6a3396d6

Windows Disguiser is a little program that allow to automatically disguise minimized windows into the system tray. This is useful when you have a lot of minimized windows into a desktop like the Windows XP, or when you just need to access the program and don't have the mouse, also works with window classes different than desktop, like XP. There's no need for a mouse to use the application. With Windows Disguiser, you can make your desktop look like a cartoon: take a look at this funny desktop! Get your free copy of this cool desktop software from: www.imagesfooter.com Windows Disguiser is not another autokiller. It does not autokill any windows. In fact, a minimal battery of its configuration is needed to work (the configuration is saved automatically into the registry, therefore, it is saved with no need of maintenance from the user). This program has very high security features: it does not need to know any user's password, in fact, it does not need any permission to work. It uses for this the Windows NT Local Security Authority (LSA). And, in fact, the LSA asks the user only for its password, when the program launches. Thanks to LSA, Windows Disguiser does not need to kill your windows, it just disguises them. This desktop must be installed, run as Administrator and must be configured. Windows Disguiser works perfectly on Windows XP, Windows 2000, Windows NT 4.0 and Windows NT 4.5 How to use this software: Download the Windows Disguiser executable from our website at www.imagesfooter.com. It's a 6.7 MB file. Run the executable. It will open a configuration dialog, where you can enter an Administrator password to launch the program. Click the "OK" button, and the program will run. It will ask you for the administrator password. You must enter this password when you click on the "OK" button. If you do not, the program will be running, disguised, and with no windows running. When you close the program, it is automatically saved into the registry, and will not ask for any permission. This program will work on all computers running Windows 2000, Windows XP, Windows NT 4.0 and Windows NT 4.5. This is a great desktop for those who do not like to mess with the system tray, or for those who just want

What's New In Windows Disguiser?

The main goal is to create a small program that allows to automatically disguise minimized windows into the system tray. How it works: The program will check periodically if there is at least one minimized window and if the window is in the same process, then it will try to add it to the system tray. If this is not possible, the program will ask the user to make an appropriate choice. More information: Pulse \(Version: 0.1\) Pulse was designed to help in managing your desktop using GUI. This tool contains an integrated solution for a modern and user friendly desktop, and a unified access to the various pieces of desktop information such as the list of windows and programs, the list of recently opened documents, the current network configuration and much more. In addition to the core functions, Pulse also has a unique feature called Pulse Widget, a special program that shows the currently opened documents as a new desktop icon. Pulse is released under the MIT license, and it is available in two editions, for Windows and for Mac OS X. The trial version is available.
