Running and gunning is fun, but there's also an edgier side to the universe. Tarnished Heroes tells the tale of a mysterious power capable of granting the wishes of those in dire need of help. Seemingly out of place in the Lands Between, you embark on a journey with your companions, practicing your magic as you travel. Powerful forces converge from all directions, and the only way to overcome them is to unite, find your purpose, and fulfill a promise you made to a dead friend. ABOUT SURVIVAL HORROR Survival Horror refers to a family of classic, run-and-gun survival horror games that appear in formats ranging from 2D to 3D. Survival Horror games are characterized by their punishing difficulty level, tense atmosphere, dearth of player guidance, and emphasis on exploration. Survival Horror games frequently feature hiding in dark environments, search for supplies, and avoiding monsters or another critter in a precarious and lengthy game. They typically are games with overtly low graphics in a retro-inspired style. The term "survival horror" generally refers to the quest for survival of the human protagonists, often in isolated or claustrophobic situations. Common elements include limited health, weapon deprivation, and nightmarish monsters. The Text:Sensory and motor nerves are very important for the welfare of the patient and the success of the surgical procedure. The nerves should be protected. For instance, when a patient has a wound or a cut on the body, the sensory nerves passing through that tissue would be exposed to pain from the surrounding tissue during the healing process. In addition, that exposed sensory nerve would provide a mechanism for the patient to feel the pain of a wound. Therefore, a patient would become a potential source of adverse medical complications without a direct means to protect that exposed nerve. Similarly, when a patient has a spinal cord injury, the sensory nerve passing through that area of the spinal cord would be exposed. If that exposed nerve is present in the spine at the spinal cord, then the ability to sense pain, temperature and vibration would be lost. Therefore, an in the spinal cord injury, the ability to sense pain, temperature and vibration would be lost. In addition, motor nerves carry information for movement such as muscle tone and motor ability to move certain body parts (e.g., the hands). Therefore, if a patient has been injured to the spinal cord and that exposed nerve is present in the spine at the spinal cord, then the patient would be effectively paralyzed for the rest of his or her life. Many approaches have been tried to protect nerves in the human body. Some of these approaches are limited because they are applicable only to a small number of the nerves. Therefore, it would be very beneficial to provide a means that can protect all of the nerves of the human body. Another approach is to "débride" the nerve or nerves in order to "free" the nerve from the surrounding tissue so that it can regenerate. Débriding refers to removing the damaged portion of the tissue. This approach works well when the nerve is injured in an area that is well shielded and protected (e.g., the brain or the spinal cord). If, however, the nerve is injured in a location where the tissue is not shielded and protected, then the nerve will be exposed to oxygen and nutrients which would be toxic to it. What would be desirable is a
