We assess the efficacy of using external fixators in repairing complex fractures of the tibia. We evaluated the results of treating 18 patients who had at least one open fracture of the distal third of the tibia in combination with either a proximal third or midshaft fracture of the same bone. In addition, we also treated 11 patients who had midshaft fractures of the tibia. The external fixators were positioned and applied by lateral, above-the-knee plating. The patients were treated over a 20-month period. Follow-up ranged from 3 to 34 months, mean 16.1 months. At follow-up, 15 of the 18 patients reported improvement in their activities of daily
