Aortic stenosis is the most common valvular disorder and the major cardiac complication of advanced age. Aortic stenosis is associated with high morbidity and mortality, the latter being related mostly to the high rate of cardiac failure, which requires hospitalization and is a frequent cause of death. Despite advances in the diagnosis and management of aortic stenosis, the impact of the disorder on the quality of life of elderly patients is felt in most communities. The ability to detect asymptomatic patients with aortic stenosis before the development of symptoms is one of the most important issues in the management of this disorder, but the risk-benefit ratio of valve intervention in elderly patients is the subject of controversy. Because the natural history of aortic stenosis is dismal, it is worthwhile attempting to identify patients for whom the benefit of surgery will be better than the risks of surgery in the elderly patient. The identification of this high-risk group of elderly patients is a major goal of any advances in the therapy of aortic stenosis. Edwin Lutyens Sir Edwin Reginald Lutyens, CBE (31 July 1869 - 12 September 1934) was an architect and garden designer, who is well known for his work in London, as well as Cambridge. His best known work is the London County Council Pavilion for the British Empire Exhibition of 1924 and 1925, both of which are Grade II* listed buildings. Early life and education Lutyens was born in Chelmsford, Essex in 1869. His father, Charles Lutyens, had been an employee of the Gramophone Company, having previously been a surveyor and architect in Nottingham. Whilst Edwin's father was still alive, Edwin was educated at Westminster School and St John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated with a BA in 1891. Whilst he was still studying, he helped his father run the family business, Charles Lutyens and Company, before continuing his studies. He gained his MA at the Royal College of Art, from the Cooper Union in New York, in 1894. Career Lutyens made some of his earliest work with his father, but in 18
