If I have two ajax calls: Web API 1: public string Method1() { return "A"; } Web API 2: public string Method2() { return "A"; } and I have both using the same HttpClient. In each I am calling ajax to WebAPI 1 and 2 and expecting each to return A... In my controller, if I call the first one, I return the A. However, if I call the second one, I get nothing back. I guess I must have misunderstood the scopes and sessions of the HttpClient because I thought each ajax call would return the string returned by the previous... How can I achieve this? A: I need to specify the type of the response in the AJAX call. That's not how the session works. The session is separate from the request. It does not store data in a global manner accessible to all requests. If you want to share data across multiple requests, you need to do so explicitly. A common example of sharing across requests is in the body of the request and you can also store data in the form of cookies. For example:

Deadly Hunter VR Crack + X64 [Updated-2022]

Available on: Microsoft Windows (PC), Apple IOS (Smartphones), Android IOS and Nintendo Switch Fun, exciting, and educational, Nancy Drew: The Deadly Device keeps the fun and mystery of the series but has been updated to include all of the latest technologies. My daughter and I absolutely loved this game. The developer does an excellent job of taking the familiar Nancy Drew narrative and integrating technology that actually teaches. One of the best parts of the game is that Nancy can call on an expert at the fictional Guardian Global Labs to give her an assist. In addition, there are puzzles and activities to be completed that teach us about electricity and science. Once again, Nancy has teamed up with her good friend, Ned, and his skeptical brother, Tim, to solve a murder and this time they're on the trail of a nefarious plot involving Nikola Tesla. As they search for clues, they must switch between the morning and night scenes to gather information and solve puzzles. Nancy learns how to take advantage of the latest technology by accessing an app on her smartphone and having her images and data transferred to a secure website for examination. Another new and exciting element is that the app is accessible only to her and Ned. They can explore areas using their phones and make sure their discoveries are recorded. Nancy's gadgetry and investigative skills are needed to solve the riddle of what is happening at the crime lab. There are two difficulty levels and the puzzles change based on the chosen level. Sometimes your immediate response is required, while at other times you have the option to take your time and find the correct answer. As always, Nancy and the boys have their share of problems – some are career related and other life or relationship related. You have to solve the puzzle to move the game forward. In addition, you can make these events bigger by using your creativity to assist Nancy. It is also fun to see what the boys are up to in their downtime. After completing the game, we are rewarded with a code to download an exciting second chapter for free, in which we learn about the life of Thomas Edison and the women who assisted him. Like the previous games in the series, this game is made to be enjoyed by children and their parents. There are good points and bad points for each chapter. The game contains so much to keep the adult players interested. The story is well written and there is no over emphasis on sex or violence, although there are some

by Tomislav Element Locks Unlike characters in other languages, where a single character is the basic unit of programming, the basic programming unit in Esperanto is the element. An element can, as in English, denote a whole class of things. Many elements in Esperanto are multi-character words (for example, vorto, kongeloj, kolónj, jenaj). These are combined with verbs which can either stand alone (for example, renkonti), or provide special meanings (for example, klarigi) or adverbs (for example, ĉefe). Elements may be made up of two or more characters; for example, alvokas, alrakvo, vidistoj, leganto, muziko, povas, malvole. Because all Esperanto words are made up of elements, we say that Esperanto is an element language (eng. "element" language). The name of the linguistic feature that is responsible for the English word being redundant can be translated to Esperanto as elektanta, alluding to the fact that an element is an abstraction that cannot be reduced to things. Nevertheless, the word "element" has an alphabetic meaning in Esperanto, so it is not really misleading. For example, the name of the first-class data type is bela, and is made up of the two characters "bel" and "la". The characters used to make up a literal can represent the elements in any possible order. For example, the Esperanto term for the English word "no" is nenoj. Elements can be arranged side by side in the same way they are in English – many in the same line of a text, many on individual lines or inside of other word-grouping characters such as a parenthesis, or in alvokado sentences. Elements can themselves take the place of a word, as well as be embedded in it. For example, the word ekonomo (simple) means something like «something which is economical and to the best degree possible». As a small example, kuri is the name of the series of books written by Harry Lorayne, a self

Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the fabrication of integrated circuits, and more specifically to a process for making shallow junction devices such as MOS transistors in a DRAM memory array. 2. Background of the Invention In the manufacture of semiconductor devices such as dynamic random access memory devices (DRAM), very high densities of DRAM cells are being fabricated. For example, a dynamic random access memory device containing 256 megabits of memory cells per chip has recently been constructed. To fabricate such a high density of DRAM cells, the size of the cells has shrunk, requiring smaller areas of field oxide, the isolation for the individual DRAM cells. Smaller isolation regions are difficult to grow by the LOCOS process used in the past. The isolation regions are typically grown as thick as 2,000 Angstroms (2000.ANG.), which often exceeds the normal thickness of field oxides in the DRAM. The thick field oxides must be grown by the expensive step of etching the field oxide, and followed by the growth of thicker oxides. In addition, the thick field oxides form a physical barrier between the devices and on top of the substrate, inhibiting the wafer from being polished. As a result, a process known as Isoplanarization has been developed to avoid the limitations of the LOCOS isolation technique. Isoplanarization uses polysilicon or polycide for device isolation. Isoplanarization allows the oxides to be thinner than those grown by conventional isolation techniques. This results in reduced lateral size of the isolation region, while maintaining the same isolation height. While a number of processes have been developed for making isolation regions, it is difficult to control the sharpness of the edges
